DEAR COLLEAGUES FROM ALL OVER THE WORLD!

It's been so good to see so many of you at the Frankfurt Book Fair this past year. We're hoping the Bologna Book Fair will be a return to normal, and look forward to working with you on beautiful new projects!

We've found some new international homes for several of our titles and this catalogue is again filled to the brim with wonderful picture books, adventure stories and non-fiction titles that allow children to learn, marvel and think about the world around them.

Then we have some news: after 22 years, our publisher Mascha de Vries has decided to pursue a career outside of publishing. We wish her the best of luck and thank her for the years of creativity and enthusiasm. Irene Kunst, who worked as an acquisitions editor at Rubinstein for the past four years, has taken over Mascha's role as publisher as of February 1st and will also be involved in rights management.

All the best,
Adrienne Hak and Irene Kunst

THE GIRL WITH THE BLUE STONE

WRITTEN BY MARANKE RINCK ILLUSTRATED BY MARTIJN VAN DER LINDEN

An imaginative take on Johannes Vermeer's iconic work

A girl hurries through the streets of Delft. She is carrying several packages that she needs to deliver to different addresses. Letters, a guitar string... and a piece of blue stone. Lapis Lazuli it's called. It's for the master painter Johannes Vermeer. He will use it to make a very special kind of blue paint: ultramarine. It's incredibly expensive, worth more than gold. The girl hesitates. Her brothers and sisters are hungry. What if she sells the little piece of stone...? But when she arrives at Vermeer's house, he has a very special request for her.

REMBRANDT AND LUCIA

WRITTEN AND ILLUSTRATED BY MYLO FREEMAN

Discover the colourful side of Rembrandt's time

Lucia lives in Amsterdam, near the busy harbour. Her father is a sailor. He is often away from home for a long time, travelling to faraway shores. And when he returns, he tells Lucia the most amazing stories. But no matter how beautiful those stories are, Lucia would still rather have her father with her. When he is about to travel again, she comes up with a plan. She'll ask the famous painter Rembrandt to make a painting of her father! Then she will always have him with her, no matter how far away he is.

- Perfect combination of art and history
- With lots of new illustrations by Geert Gratama, historical pictures and of course the paintings and drawings by Vincent van Gogh.

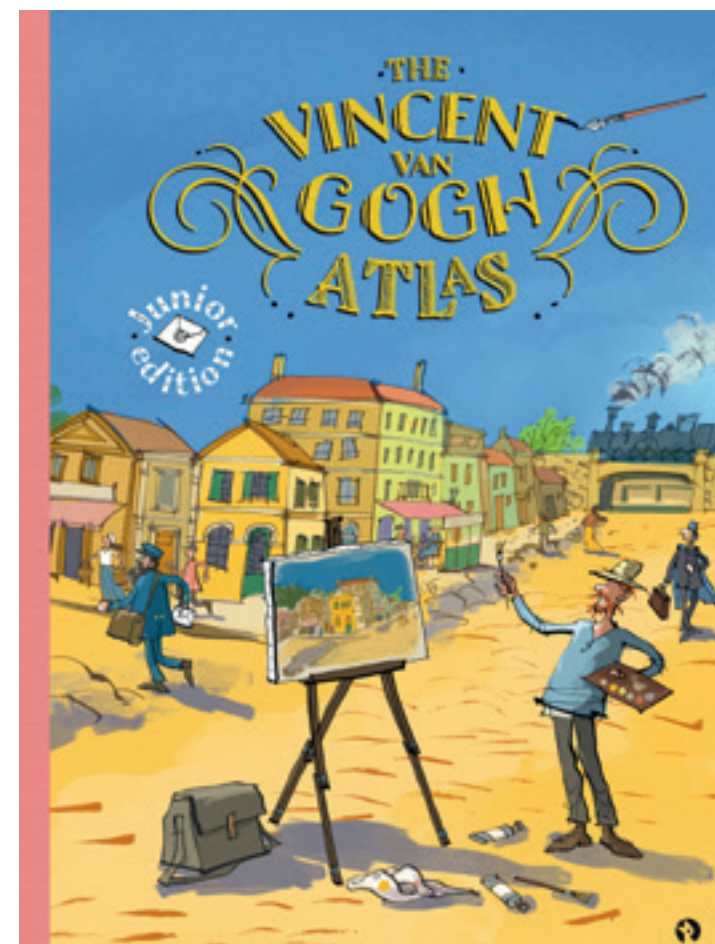

Boulevard Montmartre in Paris.

In Paris
Vincent arrived in Paris early in the morning. He had a note delivered to Theo, saying that they should meet in the Louvre Museum at twelve. We do not know if they actually met there, though. Vincent then shared a house with Theo for about two years. For a while, they had no need to write each other letters. That is unfortunate for us, as Vincent's work changed dramatically during his time in Paris. It would be interesting to find out more about what Vincent was doing at the time, what he talked to Theo about, and which famous artists he met.

The note that Vincent sent to Theo, torn out of his sketchbook.

WRITTEN BY NIENKE DENEKAMP AND RENÉ VAN BLERK ILLUSTRATED BY GEERT GRATAMA

A fascinating journey through Europe with Vincent van Gogh

You've probably seen a few paintings by the most famous Dutch painter ever: Vincent van Gogh. He travelled all over Europe, by boat, on foot or by coach, but mostly by train. He kept in touch with his family by writing lots of letters. In this book, we follow Vincent to the places where he lived and worked. You'll see the world looked very different back then. The atlas shows how Vincent took inspiration from the world around him for hundreds of drawings and paintings.

A funny and original take on picture books

Why are there so many books about bears? Well... they are just the ideal animal for a book. A snake won't fit on the page. Far too long. An elephant won't fit either. Far too big. A giraffe then? Right. Too tall. Really, if you think about it – bears are the perfect animal for a book.

A sweet story about being true to yourself

Bear's birthday is coming up. He's not looking forward to his party with his family: the aunt who gives sloppy kisses, the uncle with the strong handshake, the cousins who wolf down the cake. But what if this year... he could celebrate it just the way he likes?

A picture book about the joy of choosing peace and quiet

A king decides to leave his palace, sell his carriage and leave ruling to his first minister. He moves into a little flat with his pet rabbit and houseplant to live a quiet life. His subjects and the queen don't know what to make of his behaviour – but is it really such a strange thing to do?
